Testing the Shear Adhesion Strength of Ready-To-Use Tile Adhesives (D1 to D2) - Testing the Shear Adhesion Strength of Ready-To-Use Tile Adhesives (D1 to D2) by Wacker Chemie 7,962 views 2 years ago 3 minutes, 52 seconds - EN 12004, contains the specifications for classifying ready-to-use (RTU) D1 and D2 tile adhesive. Watch our video to get an insight ...

TESTING THE SHEAR ADHESION STRENGTH OF READY-TO-USE TILE ADHESIVES (D1 TO D2)
The materials required are described in EN 1324.

The test specimen is made by bonding two tiles together so that they overlap by exactly six millimeters.

To do so, first draw a line 6 millimeters from the edge of the tile.

After placing a template over the tile, spread the ready-to-use tile adhesive over it and fill in all the holes.

To avoid any gaps inside the mold and to remove any protruding material, move the spatula across the surface in two directions two or three times.

Carefully lift off the template without damaging or shifting the dots of adhesive.

Then leave the test piece for precisely two minutes in standard climatic conditions.

Insert four 0.8-millimeter spacer rods during conditioning

After two minutes, place the second tile on top, flush with the drawn-on line

Place a 7-kilogram weight on the test specimen for three minutes.

Remove the weight after three minutes.

Carefully remove the spacer rods without moving the tiles.

Then condition the test specimen as per EN 1324.

A Zwick-Roll universal testing machine is used here.

Fix the test specimen in the equipment.

Shear bond strength is tested as per EN 1324 until the bond fails.
